

In my 27 years as a Flight Attendant with United I can honestly say that it is predictable to determine which changes onboard the aircraft will be good, and which will be bad. Allowing cell phone use inflight will be BAD, BAD, BAD. In an emergency situation (ie: evacuation) there would be complete chaos as passengers would not focus on instructions creating a dangerous environment for others. And does the FCC want to be held accountable if terrorists are allowed to communicate amongst each other because of permitted cell phone use? Do not make us police passengers on this issue. I was assaulted once (hit in the face with a closed fist) already trying to enforce a man to sit down during taxi on the runway. Again, this is a BAD, BAD idea.
